ABSTRACT

Intended for special education teachers, regular educators working with mainstreamed students, school administrators, resource center personnel, researchers, and students, the guide provides a current and descriptive listing of approximately 125 selected special education periodicals. Section One lists the periodicals alphabetically by title. Each entry contains the following information: title, publisher, frequency of publication, cost, and identification as a journal, index, or newsletter. Entries also include the following descriptions: major subjects covered, intended audience, scope, and focus. Section Two, the Subject Index, groups the periodicals by major subjects covered. All subject headings assigned in this section are cross referenced to the entries which appear in the title section. Among subjects covered are aurally handicapped, child psychology, gifted, learning disabilities, mentally handicapped, rehabilitation, and visually handicapped. (SB)

INTRODUCTION

This guide provides a current and descriptive listing of selected special education periodicals, and reflects the variety of perspectives and concerns that exist in the field. It identifies, describes, and categorizes relevant sources of information that address the multidisciplinary nature of special education. The guide will prove useful to special education teachers, regular educators working with mainstreamed students, school administrators, resource center personnel, researchers, and students, and will assist those starting or building specialized collections.

Section One lists the periodicals alphabetically by title. Each entry contains the following information: title, publisher, frequency of publication, cost, and identification as a journal, index or newsletter. The entries also include the following descriptions: major subjects covered, intended audience, scope, and focus. With the exception of the "focus" category, the descriptive information was extracted by examining each periodical, and considering its editorial statement. The subject headings were derived primarily from the Thesaurus of ERIC Descriptors, 7th Edition, in order to ensure consistency in vocabulary usage.

The descriptions listed under "focus" identify the type of material emphasized in each publication. A "general interest" listing, for example, would indicate that the publication is aimed at a broad audience, and is not overly technical or theoretical in nature. "Practice" indicates material that is "how-to" in nature. Other descriptors include: research, theory, and issues.

Section Two, the Subject Index, groups the periodicals alphabetically by major subjects covered. All subject headings assigned in this section are cross-referenced to the entries which appear in the title section. The user is advised to consult Section One for information on individual titles, and Section Two for identification of periodicals regularly covering specific topics.

Periodical literature reflects current educational issues, which naturally vary with the times. Therefore, this guide is subject to change, and is not intended as a definitive listing. Rather, it is intended to link the educator with relevant sources of specialized information.
